After getting up an hour or two earlier than they do, children are going to be hungry, tired, and ready for some fun. This can be tricky when you have a kid with a short attention span or a toddler who can get out of hand. That's why you have to be creative in finding options to keep the kids busy and enjoy their summer vacation. A few tips on how to keep children occupied throughout the day: 1. Dress the children in bright colors The more vibrant and colorful the clothes, the more interested they'll be in playing. Nothing works better in the heat of the day than blue or yellow or green. Blue has the ability to calm and calm them down when they're in extreme temperatures. It's a relaxed color and brings ease. Yellow is another good choice in keeping the children entertained, as it's a fun color. 2. Give them a small toy A small toy can help the kids get their attention. A balloon to see who can pop it and a tape measure to find out their height is a great gift. Anything that's easy to handle and that's getting them up from their seat and working together as a team will help keep them busy. 3. Get them into a colorful playtime area Hanging outside to play in their pool is a good idea, but they need to be inside somewhere else. They can have a wall to climb on or colorful statues. Small children need to be watching when they're having fun playing, so make sure they have safe toys. Every child, young or old, has a fear of heights and kids with autism tend to get easily scared. Playground slides can be noisy and cause a lot of trouble.

George Stone (artist) George Stone was a children's book illustrator and painter. Biography Born in London in 1912, George Stone moved with his family to Moscow, Russia in the 1920s, and attended the Moscow State Art School from 1926 to 1929, studying under Andre L'Hote. While in Moscow, Stone came under the influence of Russian Surrealist painter Malevich, and created illustrations for the children's books of fellow Surrealist Kazimir Malevich. In 1930, Stone was invited to the Académie de la Grande Chaumière in Paris, and exhibited some of his art there. In 1935, he was a member of the Black Mountain artists' group, participating in their shows in Greenwich Village, New York City and London. After World War II, Stone moved to London where he became a prolific illustrator for publishers such as Faber and Faber and Oxford University Press, and later became a successful visual artist in his own right, exhibiting regularly at the Royal Academy of Arts from 1950 to 1954. Selected works Stone has over 1,700 illustrations to his credit. Included among these are 50 books for Oxford University Press and Faber and Faber. His works are in the collections of The British Museum, the Museum of Modern Art and the National Gallery. Books Marcella Lockett - Mother's Day: Stories of Mothers and Mothers Day (1953) Jules Verne - De la planète des enfants (1964) Karen Green - The Little Twins and the Amnesia Treasure (1964) Jill Paton Walsh - The Moon Gate (1965) Jo Ellen Merritt - The f988f36e3a
